

From: rob(u)ART
To: Microsoft ATR
Date: 11/21/01 5:38pm
Subject: Settlement with Microsoft

I think it would add insult to injury to allow Microsoft to deposit their products in the schools.

Doesn't that create unfair competition to other companies trying to persuade the schools to buy their products?

Why not require Microsoft to give a certain amount of money to the schools and let the schools decide what computer products they want to buy. In other words, they can choose not to buy Microsoft. Isn't that the point of the lawsuit in the first place: make sure the playing field is level and that consumers can exercise choice?

--

Robert Morgan
Honolulu